Education and Lifelong Learning: Furthering the Global Agenda So Older People Are Not Left Behind

People of all ages can benefit from expanded educational opportunities including literacy programs, job training, intergenerational learning and empowerment initiatives. Yet, from a global perspective, almost all of the emphasis is on education for youth. Education should be a universal human right for all, no matter what age or circumstance. We will explore the value of lifelong learning for all, what is happening internationally in adult education, how age-friendly universities are taking hold, and what is happening on the grass roots level.

Program Moderator: Sandra Timmermann, UN Representative,
International Federation on Ageing

Speakers:

Katarina Popovic, Secretary General, International Council for Adult Education

Ruth Finkelstein, Executive Director, Brookdale Center on Aging
Hunter College (an age-friendly university)
